

CANADIAN AGRICULTURE

Canadian agriculture travels worldwide. Canada exports crops to the United States, Japan, and Mexico. Canola—used in cooking oil, cosmetics, and biodiesel fuel—generates over US$2 billion in export income a year.

Canada exports nearly US$3 billion worth of fish and fish products. These fishermen are unloading their day's catch of cod in Petty Harbour, Newfoundland and Labrador. Overfishing in Canadian waters has critically endangered several species of fish.

Forests—Canada's surplus crop

Short growing seasons throughout much of Canada make farming difficult, but not forestry. Forests cover nearly 40 percent of the country. Two-thirds of British Columbia is forested. The forest industry is Canada's single largest net exporter, contributing approximately US$35 billion to the country's trade surplus.
